Jordana Talsky “Zahava” EP Release

Jordana Talsky is a Canadian vocal loop artist. Everything you hear on her “Zahava” recordings is either her voice or sounds made with her body.

This all makes for an incredibly ethereal, soulful, organic sound. Traditionally constructed songs recorded in an untraditional way with the most basic of human instruments... ourselves.

However, this is not beat boxing. It’s far more than harmonising. Although, there is some lovely harmonising, of course. No this is something else entirely. It’s light, melodic, rhythmic, nuanced and poetic.

The songs are beautiful in their own right, regardless of her ingenious method of creating them. Jordana Talsky also has a phenomenal voice. Her huge range and gorgeous tone lift these songs sky high.

She's been a finalist in the John Lennon Songwriting Competition twice, as well as many other awards for excellence for her voice and songwriting. Which really doesn't surprise me.

Jordana uses her voice and body to create cathedrals of sound. Layers of voice, feathery flicks of fingers against skin and sighs and oo's. All building and curling around the clever, inventive, purposeful lyrics. It's really rather magical. Like nothing I've heard before. Open, wise, earthy and fun.

This is an all-vocal-looping record. All of the sounds were made by my voice or body.

In becoming a loop artist and learning to do a new thing with myself, I have come up against my insecurities and criticisms, and have found that in many ways, this creation journey has mirrored the challenge I experience to be at home with myself.

I believe most of us have different parts to our identities that are in conflict but can be harmonized as we grow into ourselves. I am a person of several voices, and now a choir of one.

"Zahava", my middle name, means "golden" in Hebrew, and reminds me that the gold in all of us - our beauty, wisdom and power - will be best harnessed when we learn to feel at home.

I hope something in this music may inspire you to find home in your self.

Jordana Talsky is a gem. Her songs elegant and unforgettable. I love all of them, equally. Although if I had to pick a favourite, it would have to be “Oh Yeah.” I just connected with it immediately. I loved this EP, I cant wait for more from Jordana Talsky, in fact. Although, I do think she needs to write a musical. With only vocal loop. That really would be amazing!!!
