Over and Out released their new self-titled EP on 27th June 2014.

The new EP sees Over and Out hone their alternative rock sound with an eclectic mix of tracks, expanding their loud and raucous noise pop aesthetics.

Having recently been announced as a support band for Funeral for a Friend in September, Over and Out completed a 15-date tour in July in support of their new record. The new release pays homage to turn of the century emo-rock bands Brand New and Taking Back Sunday, but with a fresh approach to anthemic and atmospheric noise rock.

Lead track “Adverts” is reminiscent of 90s-alt acts Fugazi and Mudhoney, mixing frantic grungy feedback with a stripped back fuzzy chorus. The record ends on “Barriers”, with bassist Billy Marshall repetitively urging to “stop making sense of all the things that don’t make any sense.”

The EP, recorded in its entirety in the garage of lead singer Steve Harrison, displays Over and Out’s ability as not only songwriters – but also talented producers. Over and Out formed in early 2013 in the quaint Lake District, Cumbria. The band features Steve Harrison (vocals/guitar), Bradley Neen (guitar), Billy Marshall (bass/vocals), Sam Groom (drums).

Thus far in 2014 Over and Out have been refining their live sound, drip feeding new material whilst picking up support slots with Blitz Kids and Natives and completing two UK tours. Dodging chemistry lectures and day jobs in the process, the band have been proficiently writing new material which will lead up to the release of a mini-album in the fall.
