

Stephen Paul Taylor Bio

Stephen Paul Taylor is a Neo-Synthpop-Punk, genre-hopping artist who graced hundreds of stages all over Europe, went viral (10 million views across all platforms) and had his music featured in a commercial for Spotify. His shows are electrifying, energetic and colourful and he has attracted attention from the likes of Dieter Bohlen (Modern Talking) and Dick Valentine (Electric Six).

After playing with the duo Trike (Taylor and Xania Keane) for five years, Taylor decided to strike out on his own in 2013. Armed with his keyboard and a handful of songs he began playing in the streets of Berlin. He immediately began booking shows.

In November 2014, he was filmed briefly playing his song EKSF and went viral. This virality led to him getting booked all over Europe (touring 23 countries - Russia four times), playing on Das Supertalent and being interviewed from Arte, RTL2, RBB, Joiz.de TV and many more

He's released a few albums, including 2020's "Synthpop is Dead" (produced by Marco Haas aka T Raumschmiere) which garnered plenty of positive reviews.

He's currently working on a new album which features the talented Preston Heyman (Kate Bush, Terence Trent D'Arby) and Derrick McIntyre (Jamiroquai)

His shows are known for being extremely energetic and lively, involving glitter, face paint, very catchy pop songs and a lot of love for his craft. He's definitely quite a phenomenon. As Dick Valentine (Electric Six lead singer) stated "(SPT is) a firecracker!"

