PARAKOSMOS

Studio Album (2017)

In 2017, Bottlesmoker produces new musical creation process through Parakosmos. The most exceptional album with different concept and outstanding sounds. The songs are about artistic rituals carry out by indigenous people in a rural area of Indonesia. The traditional ritual is a natural expression to preserve sense of balance in life. They do collaboration with ethnomusicologist who once carried out field recording in many locations in Indonesia to record and collect various exceptional sound-bite from traditional music instruments in Indonesia and documented each of them under the name of Aural Archipelago.

KONSER PLANTASIA

Live Album (2021)

Bottlesmoker did the science of serenading vegetation to improve plants' health. They adjusted frequencies and used specific repeating melodies to achieve maximum plant happiness. Bottlesmoker have probed deeply some of the research about music effects to plants and refined them into one music composition that improves plants' growth. They also took on a history of Indonesian culture that has a special connection to rice plants, such as the sound of Karinding which can rid vermin to the Tarawangsa which is used in the rituals toward Dewi Sri as the goddess of rice.

Music for plants: the Indonesian band using sounds and frequencies to relax them, and inviting audience members to bring their own

- Indonesian electronic music duo Bottlesmoker held their first plant-centric concert in July, playing to an audience who brought more than 150 house plants
- · They even capture 'sounds' from the plants which they turn into different melodies and patterns

Bottlesmoker embracing the sound of Nusantara in the newest album Parakosmos.

Taking inspiration from the unique texture of Indonesia's own traditional culture, the duo mixing the field recording with electronic tunes they were known with. The result is surprisingly hypnotic and easy to listens.

M > Entertainment

With all the music tech on the market, it's rare to stumble upon electronic music that still feels raw and home-made.

Bottlesmoker is a duo from Bandung, Indonesia, who make music from things lying around at home.
