

Biography

Fitz is the music of Sam Fitzpatrick, an experimental approach to acoustic music that began as a studio project in the mountains of South Wales in the summer of 2011. Sam formed a band and over the next two years toured throughout the UK supporting acts such as To Kill A King, and The Corona's at The Royal Albert Hall's Elgar Room. Following a season of festival appearances in 2013, including a slot at Bestival, Fitz performed as tour support on the sold-out 'A Scene Of Plenty' UK tour with folk-band Keston Cobblers Club.

In 2014, Sam took his 'Steam Plough' studio to London, and throughout the year began establishing a reputation for his alternative production style with both underground and well-known artists. Performing at, and running intimate acoustic nights across the city, Sam honed his craft and refined his ability to silence audiences with his modest and intricate approach.

The release of a two-part EP series is planned for 2015, featuring long-time collaborator Joel Careless among other guest artists. Having cut their teeth on almost every sized stage imaginable, Fitz can perform in solo, duo, trio and full-band set-ups.

"...That's the way to do it!"
(BBC 6Music - Tom Robinson)

"...The cacophony of instruments, played by talented musicians and creative artists, gives the tracks a depth like nothing else I've heard from an independent band..." (The Ruckus - Blog)

"It's authentic and 'homey' and sounds as if the instruments grew out of the barn and waited, without a hurry, for the right people to come and play them. Those people would be the young men and women of Fitz.. If calming and peaceful silence had a sound, this would be it..." (The Melody Box - Blog)
