

HOW TO LOOT BRAZIL

PRESS KIT

For 15 years straight, How To Loot Brazil consistently cut their own path without a care in the world. Being described as „probably Germany's best indie band“ (OX) or „even more genius than the band itself can imagine“ (VISIONS), they still stay under the radar of attention, probably not meeting the demands of social media as they don't have anything to sell but their music itself.

And there's a lot of music: Seven studio albums, one EP and six new singles in the last 10 months alone underline their impressive work ethic. Their sound can hardly be categorized but maybe best be described as eclectic indie pop with an attitude, ranging from fast and angry (Post) Punk with Riot Girl shoutings to anthemic Indie Rock and acid flavored dance music with an undeniable love for the 80s, giving labels and bookers a hard time to put them in their rosters. But the golden thread running through all of their songs is the undisputed commitment to great catchy melodies and their frenetic drive to write ultimate pop hooks. Since How To Loot Brazil decided to make their isolated vocals available to the public, the internet is bursting with remixes from hundreds of producers around the world, for example Never Surrender (NL), French Fuse (FRA), Mojjo (BRA) or Kodak Black (USA) having gained millions of streams already.

How To Loot Brazil are totally DIY in all respects. Apart from their first album "Auto Fister", which came out on Frank Popp's label TV Eye, they release all their tracks via their own digital label "Look! Mum! No Hit!" without any third party promotion or distribution support. They write and produce their music entirely by themselves in their own home studio in Soest, a small town in the West of Germany.
